Contents Of The Cave

"What are those kids doing?" muttered Sloan, as he stopped abruptly and grabbed his companion by the sleeve.

"Aw, they're just diggin' a cave or a tunnel," said Hot Head unconcernedly. Then he stopped abruptly and said, "Oh no, Sloan. They can't!"

"That's what I mean, you meat head," answered Sloan. "We buried the stuff there. What if they find it?"

"I'm going to make them cut it out," said Hot Head as he started to run over to the vacant lot where the two boys were digging.

"No, don't! That won't do any good," reasoned Sloan, hastily keeping Hot Head from going over to the two boys. "That'll just get us in trouble. They'll wonder why we want them to stop and what right we have to make them stop."

"Guess you're right," mused Hot Head as he was abruptly halted in his tracks. "But, what are we going to do?"

"Well," thought Sloan, the brains of the pair. "I've got it! Why don't you go over and help the kids?"

"Who me?" answered the amazed Hot Head. "What good'll that do?"

"Oh, listen, Hot Head, it's obvious," Sloan told his partner as his voice dropped to a whisper. A glimmer of understanding passed over Hot Head's ugly face and soon he was smiling as if he were enjoying a huge joke. "Okay, pal," he beamed, as he walked over to where the boys were digging.

Mike looked up from his digging as Hot Head approached. His friend Will, was so busy with his shovel that he didn't notice Hot Head. "Hello, Mister," greeted Mike.

"Hi there, sonny," smiled Hot Head. "What are you kids doin'?"

"We're digging a cave," eagerly answered Mike.

"Yeah," piped up Will. "We have a club and this is going to be the meeting place."

"That sounds like a swell idea," mused Hot Head as he ran his hand through his thinning hair. "Maybe I can help you."

"Gee, do you really want to?" asked Mike in amazement.

"Sure, kld," smiled Hot Head. "I haven't had any exercise for a long time. Would be good for an old man like me."

Hot Head grabbed the shovel away from Mike and started digging with a vengeance.

"Boy! We'll have this cave dug in no time at all," gasped Will, as he leaned on his shovel and watched Hot Head dig.

"Not if you don't stop leaning on your shovel," said Mike as he glared at Will.

Hot Head kept up the pace remarkably well and he was quite sure he was digging in the exact spot he wanted. Mike and Will took turns with the other shovel and soon they were waist deep in the earth. As Hot Head felt he was reaching his objective he slyly said, "Why don't you kids take a breather? Go down and get a coke or something?"

"Oh, no," the boys replied in one breath. "We're making such progress we don't want to stop now."

Hot Head started to say, "Get lost, will ya," but held his tongue just in time. Well, he thought, if he couldn't get rid of the kids he'd have to think fast. While he was thinking of his next move, he suddenly heard Will scream, "Hey! I found something. Look!"

Hot Head dropped his shovel and was almost afraid to look. When he finally looked down at Will's feet and saw what the shovel had uncovered he felt like the world had come to an end. There was a long, thin metal box!

Will leaned over and touched the box. Then he picked it up carefully and examined every corner of it. He looked in amazement at Mike and said, "What do you suppose it is?"

"I don't know," answered Mike breathlessly. "Buried treasure? Who would have thought we'd find buried treasure?"

"How do you know it's treasure?" asked Will. "Except this box is locked. There must be something valuable in it. What should we do?"

"I don't think we should break into it, do you?" queried Mike.

"Oh, no!" gasped Hot Head, finally having recovered his equilibrium.

"You're right, Mister," continued Will. "Maybe we should take it to the police."

"Let's take it to Crimebuster," said Mike, solving the whole problem. "He'll tell us what we ought to do."

"Crimebuster!" shuddered Hot Head. "Yeah, er, I was, er, just goin' down in that direction. Why don't I drop it off?"

"That's real nice of you," said Mike. "But I'd kind of like to go down, too."

"Yes," continued Will. "I'd like to be right there when C. B. sees the box and figures out what to do. There might even be a reward!"

"Well," muttered Hot Head. "I tell ya what. Let's all go down and see what happens. I've got a car over here and we can drive right down."

"That's swell, let's go," agreed Will as he grabbed the box tightly under his arm, dropped the shovel and climbed out of the hole in the ground.

Hot Head and his two companions walked up the block to Hot Head's car. Sloan was lounging in the front seat, his hat pulled over his eyes and he was half asleep. When Hot Head opened the car door, Sloan came to with a start, saw the familiar box under Will's arm, almost fell out of the car and said, "Hot Head, what in . . ."

"Look what we found, Sloan," Hot Head interrupted just in time. "We are all going to take this box down to Crimebuster and ask him what we should do with it. Okay kids, crawl in."

To Hot Head's relief, Sloan was dumbfounded, otherwise he might have easily said something uncalled for. Hot Head tried not to push the boys into the back seat in his eagerness to get moving. He casually walked around the car, crawled behind the wheel and started the motor. Hot Head purposely drove in the direction of Loover's office while Sloan sat beside him in amazement.

Suddenly Hot Head turned the car off the main street, stepped on the accelerator and Sloan began to relax. Mike and Will were startled.

"Mister," gasped Will, "this isn't the way to Loover's office."

"As if I didn't know," laughed Hot Head. "You dumb kids. Did you think I really wanted to go call on Crimebuster?"

Mike and Will looked at each other amazed and suddenly both were very frightened and afraid to say anything. Hot Head stepped on the gas and soon the car was speeding out of town. On and on they drove. The boys were trapped and helpless and could only wonder with fear in their hearts what would happen next. The countryside sped by and before long they had driven so far that the landscape ceased to be familiar. Mike and Will didn't know which highway they were on, or which direction they were going, the car had switched around and circled so many times.

Sloan and Hot Head carried on little or no conversation though Will did catch one sentence. "Well, what are you going to do with these kids?" The reply was whispered so low that Will never knew what Hot Head had in mind. The day crept slowly on and the car kept moving fast.

As the sun was setting, Hot Head suddenly swerved the car off onto a side road. He drove down the road for a short distance, then he jammed on the brakes, turned around to the two boys and waved a gun in their faces.

"Okay, kids, hop out. We'll let ya off easy, but drop that box!"

Will dropped the box with a clatter to the floor of the car and the two jumped out as fast as they could move. Hot Head wheeled the car around and left Will and Mike standing in a cloud of dust.

"I got the license number," Mike said to Will.

"So did I," answered Will, "let's not forget it. Now we really better get in touch with C. B."

"But where are we?" mused Mike.

"We'll just have to start walking till we find some sign of civilization," answered Will.

The two boys walked and walked. There was not a house in sight. Not even a car passed them. Finally they sighted a farm house and hastened their steps. Exhausted and hungry, they knocked on the door and gaspingly asked to use the telephone. Mike got the call through to Crimebuster quickly, told his story breathlessly, then dropped the receiver on the hook.

Crimebuster started the wheels turning. An all state alarm was sent out to watch for a car with license number 5-2027. A squad car picked up Crimebuster and he raced out to the farm house to pick up the boys and get further information from them.

The two tired boys greeted Crimebuster like a long lost friend. They climbed into the car and repeated their story to him. Crimebuster said little while they told their harrowing tale. When they'd finished he said, "Remember the jewel robbery in Brecktown last week? Two men answering the description you gave were the thieves. No trace could be found of them and, of course, the jewels completely disappeared."

"You mean that box was full of jewels?" asked Mike.

"I wouldn't be surprised," answered Crimebuster. "Funny thing to bury them — except that the jewels were 'hot'. I guess the two men wanted to wait until the fuss was over before they came after them."

"Wow! Just think what might have happened to us," sighed Will, relieved to be in the safety of the squad car.

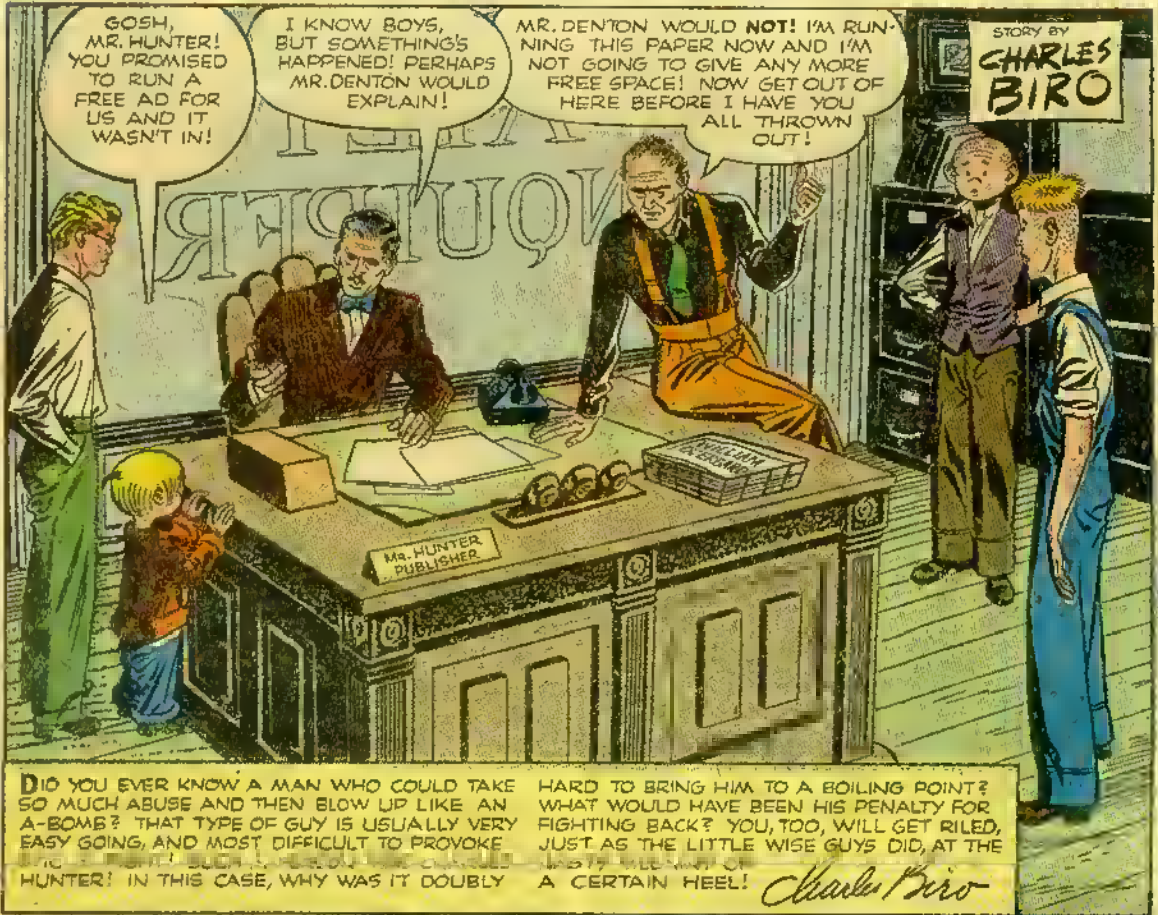

"Right you are, Will," answered Crimebuster. "But, instead, if that box turns out to be the stolen jewels, you two are in for a nice reward!"

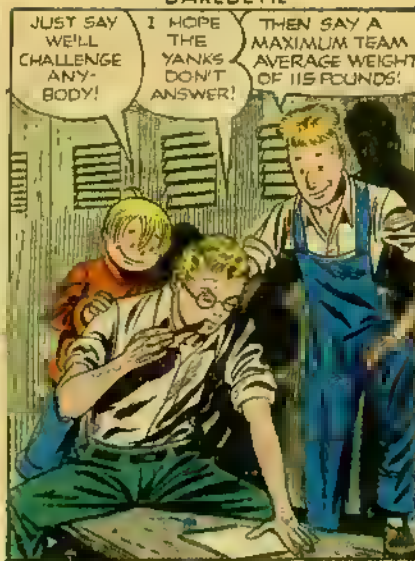

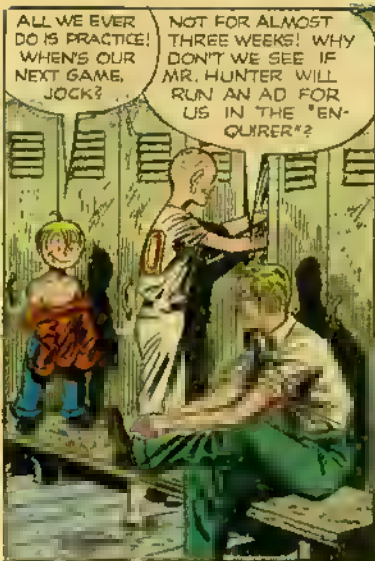

Just at that moment the car radio blared, "Car with license number 5-2027 apprehended at state border. Driver identified as Hot Head Harrison. Companion identified as Slim Sloan. Both wanted for robbery in three states. Contents of metal box identified as Brecktown jewels. Over. Out."
